Message from
Mr. Pollard

“There are two types of people who never achieve much in their lifetime. The person who won’t do what he is told, and the person who does no more than he is told” (Andrew Carnegie). If you insert “children” for people, and “child” for person, this quote becomes a challenge for all parents. I know of no way better to instill this attitude in your child than to clearly explain your expectations, consistently apply them, and include frequent praise for achievement.
